ICYMI: Attorney General Steve Marshall Discusses Public Safety, Border Security, and Protecting Families on NFRW's America's Kitchen Table Podcast

(Montgomery, Ala) – Alabama Attorney General Steve Marshall recently joined the America's Kitchen Table podcast, hosted by the National Federation of Republican Women, to discuss the issues most critical to Alabama families. The conversation covered a wide range of topics, including crime in our communities, securing the southern border, and protecting women in sports and public spaces.

During the interview, Attorney General Marshall emphasized the importance of supporting law enforcement and holding violent criminals accountable. He provided an update on his recent border visit, sharing firsthand insights into the challenges facing law enforcement officers and the impact of the ongoing crisis on Alabama communities.

Marshall also addressed the importance of standing up for women's rights in athletics and public spaces, underscoring his commitment to ensuring fairness and safety for Alabama women and girls. Alabama has continued to play a critical role at the national level by exposing medical, legal, and political actions to exploit vulnerable children with medical interventions.

"Families in Alabama and across the country want safety, security and fairness," Attorney General Marshall said. "That means holding violent criminals accountable, standing firm against the chaos at our southern border and protecting women and girls from policies that endanger their safety and opportunities. These are not abstract debates; they have real consequences. We cannot afford weak leadership or half-measures. We must meet these challenges with conviction and deliver solutions that put families first. That is what I am fighting for every day."
